

a skillful

Your article, "The Dangerous Magic of LSD" is an all-out attempt to ridicule and slander the research work which has been performed (at the risk of their careers) by over thirty recognized psychologists and philosophers from major American universities. In compiling his long list of gossip items your reporter even finds it necessary to accuse our children's pet dog of biting neighbors--a charge which seems strangely irrelevant to the magic or dangers of LSD and relevant only to a professional job of character assassination by innuendo.

The success or failure of the IFIF research on LSD and utopian forms of community living must be judged (the way you judge a ballplayer's performance) in light of the competition's record. Evaluated on this realistic basis, ~~xxxx~~ ~~abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz~~ let's compare the score-card of the IFIF LSD project with the opposition's: (1) Our prisoner rehabilitation project cut the crime rate by more than half. What psychiatric project can match this? (2) Over two thirds of our subjects (and they number well over a thousand) report dramatic positive changes in their lives after their LSD experience. (3) Administered to alcoholics, in the religious-rebirth context which IFIF advocates, <sup>CAN YOU</sup> one dose of LSD stops drinking in over fifty percent of the grateful cases. Name a better record for cures of this dreadful social problem? (4) The fact that over two thirds of our professional religious subjects attained deep revelatory and religious experiences has excited the respectful interest of top theologians and philosophers of religion. Who will quarrel with this spiritual achievement? Why was this project ignored by your reporter? (5) Our attempt to ~~abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz~~ ~~abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz~~ bring the issue of consciousness-expanding drugs untapped and the/potentialities of the human nervous system to the public eye has certainly succeeded in obtaining adequate press and magazine coverage. Even in the negative articles the message is there for the discerning reader. We believe that this public interest demonstrates a tremendous hunger and readiness for increased awareness in this country and in this time. (6) Even at the gross, practical level of inn-keeping your article acknowledges the fact that our Mexican hotel received ten times the

Lama Chaple

Kali takes care: l, T. But Kapper

↳ TEST

LESSON

Bran Helylate

every morning - routine; CLEAN

Start are